Messaging Spay/Neuter Lessons from the Gulf Coast Spay/Neuter Campaign

March 2009

Heather Cammisa, Spay/Neuter Initiatives Manager

This report is the culmination of a two year effort to understand what approaches are most effective to motivate people to spay or neuter their pets. Although the research occurred in Louisiana and Mississippi, consistent results across groups by age, income, ethnicity and other factors suggest that the results are broadly applicable across the United States. Humane groups nationwide are already applying findings shared in 2008 at The HSUS Animal Care Expo, Taking Action for Animals and other conferences.

The research included spay / neuter promotion examples from a variety of organizations. Negative comments from pet owners show that what appeals to us doesn't always appeal to our target audience. These comments are not intended to criticize the organizations that developed the communications or reflect badly on any organization that has pursued similar approaches.

The purpose of this report is to share results so that together we know more and accomplish more with our outreach efforts.

The Project

Project Background

The Katrina recovery effort highlighted pet overpopulation and limited humane infrastructure in Louisiana and Mississippi. This project grew from concerns about challenges in the region and momentum that national and local groups established to address solutions.

To invest wisely, The HSUS pursued extensive research with pet owners on spay and neuter decisions. Rather than spend money on past outreach approaches that had not been fully effective, the project team explored:

- Owner attitudes and behaviors around spay or neuter
- How best to communicate spay and neuter to reduce companion animal overpopulation and resulting euthanasia

The resulting $2MM communications campaign launched in three pilot areas in the fall of 2008, with more broad roll-out in spring / summer 2009.

For additional background from the first phase of the project, including pet acquisition and altering rates, visit www.humanesociety.org/gulfcoastphase1report.

After Katrina: Improving the Lives of Gulf Coast Dogs and Cats

A joint project of

A special Thank You to Maddie's Fund for their commitment to data driven solutions to companion animal overpopulation. Several key components of the project research, including a census of shelter intake, focus groups and a telephone survey of pet owners were made possible through a $ 999,700 grant from Maddie's Fund as part of the "After Katrina" project.

A special Thank You to shelters and pet owners across Louisiana and Mississippi for their participation and insights.

Research Approach And Applicability

Research Approach

Research activities addressed the following questions:

- What is the status of dogs and cats in Louisiana and Mississippi?
- Why don't people spay and neuter? What will it take to motivate them?
- Will proposed communications work?

What Is the Status of Dogs and Cats in Louisiana and Mississippi?

Goals

- Measure prevalence of pet ownership and spay/neuter
- Explore characteristics of owners who do/do not spay and neuter
- Assess the extent of pet overpopulation
- Establish baseline and track animal shelter intake and outcomes over campaign

Methods

Inventory of Pet Owners (Oct-Nov. 2006)

- 779 cat and dog owners in Louisiana and Mississippi
- Random digit dialed telephone survey with additional cell phone sample in Orleans and Jefferson parishes. Representative, weighted.

Shelter Census (May 2007 – ongoing)

- 57 animal shelters across Louisiana and Mississippi representing 91% of annual animal intake
- Asilomar Accord level data 2005 through 2010

What Is the Status of Dogs and Cats in Louisiana and Mississippi?

This research confirmed observations during the Katrina recovery that spay / neuter rates are lower in this region than for the U.S. on average. Intake and euthanasia rates per human thousand are higher.

	Louisiana & Mississippi	Nationwide
Dog Ownership	42%	39%
Cat Ownership	21%	34%
Dogs Spayed/Neutered	51%	70%
Cats Spayed/Neutered	77%	84%
Intake Per Thousand	37.4 (MS) 29.9 (LA)	23.3
Euthanasia Per Thousand	24.9 (MS) 21.4 (LA)	12.5
Asilomar Tracking (annual)	87% (MS) 94% (LA)	< 1%?

Why Don't People Spay and Neuter? What Will It Take to Motivate Them?

Goals

- Explore attitudes toward spay / neuter and obstacles to getting procedure
- Assess reactions to potential message concepts
- Test existing print and TV media pieces (8 print pieces, 6 PSAs, focus groups only)
- Test effectiveness of potential spokespeople and message delivery vehicles
- Identify persuadable target groups and strategies to reach them

Methods

Qualitative Research: Focus Groups (June 2007)

- Eight focus groups broadly representative of region's geographic and racial diversity
 - Six groups had unaltered pets: four with Caucasians, two with African Americans
 - Two groups had spayed or neutered pets: both were mixed race groups

Social Marketing Survey (Sept-Oct. 2007)

- 964 pet owners with at least one unaltered cat or dog, excluding professional breeders. Includes 875 dog owners and 425 cat owners (adds to > 964 due to multi-pet households)
- Random digit dial telephone survey. Data weighted to accurately reflect population 12

Will Proposed Communications Work?

Goals

- Test and refine messages
- Determine knowledge of terms
- Obtain feedback on how messages are presented
- Track which media venues and outreach efforts generate the most surgeries

Methods

Qualitative Research: Creative Testing (September 2008)

- 41 in-depth individual interviews
- Participants were weighted toward lower income and represented region's racial mix.
- Breeders and those firmly opposed to spay / neuter were excluded.

Pilot Market Implementation & Evaluation (November 2008 - March 2009)

- Three pilot markets tracking campaign response: Shreveport, LA; Jackson, MS; Gulfport, MS

Applicability

Top research findings were consistent across age, income, race, and education as well as for differing pet owner characteristics such as history of litters. The outcomes were also similar between Louisiana and Mississippi and within different geographical areas of the two states.

These results suggest that the findings apply beyond the Gulf region and can guide decisions on spay / neuter programs and promotion nationwide.

Increasing Spay / Neuter

- Determine the target audience
 - Capture “low-hanging fruit” of people not strongly opposed
 - Check that people with altered animals don’t have unaltered at home
- Decrease the barriers
- Define the message
- Design the communications
- Direct the outreach

Good News - the Majority of Owners Were Already Interested in Spay / Neuter

A lot of people do not spay or neuter any of their pets. How about you? How likely are you to spay or neuter your pet or pets? Would you say very likely, somewhat likely, not too likely, not likely at all?

Capture the Low Hanging Fruit

The team grouped reasons for not spaying and neutering by how much owners were opposed to the procedure. Many people indicated practical barriers of cost or insufficient engagement in the issue, rather than resistance.

The HSUS campaign prioritizes owners like this as “low hanging fruit,” the primary group that the communications should mobilize.

Which one or two of these reasons best describes why you have not spayed, neutered or fixed your dog so it can't have puppies – Up to two responses per respondent, so percents across this and next slides add to more than 100%.

Although the campaign doesn't target highly opposed owners, many responded well to proposed messages and will spay and neuter as a result of communications.

Which one or two of these reasons best describes why you have not spayed, neutered or fixed your dog so it can't have puppies – Up to two responses per respondent, so percents across this and prior slides add to more than 100%.

Determine the Target Audience - Other Factors

- Low income owners and African-Americans were initially less likely to spay or neuter their animals. However, after hearing survey messages, they showed the greatest gains in intent to spay / neuter. These groups are therefore a priority target of the communications campaign because of the potential of greatly increasing the rate of spay and neuter for pets in these households.
- Best practices in spay / neuter outreach include targeting the message to neighborhoods that account for a disproportionate share of intake, especially for puppies and kittens. In the pilot phase of the project, local humane organizations used their data to define areas for events and leaf-letting.
- Owners with both altered and unaltered pets show the highest rate of interest in spay/neuter of unaltered animals in the home, before any kind of messaging. Veterinarians, especially, have an opportunity to discuss “other pets” as this segment reports a high rate (77%) of regular checkups.

Increasing Spay / Neuter

- Determine the target audience
- Decrease the barriers
 - Ensure enough low-cost spay / neuter
 - Address the trust barrier
- Define the message
- Design the communications
- Direct the outreach

Ensure Enough Low Cost Spay / Neuter

Cost is a significant barrier to increasing the prevalence of spaying and neutering.

..cost represents the leading reason why cat owners do not spay and neuter and ranks fairly high among dog owners as well. Asked more directly, 42 percent agree (27 percent strongly agree) with the statement, “spaying and neutering simply costs too much for me.”

-Greenberg, Quinlan Rosner Research; October 2007

Providing sufficient low-cost surgery capacity is, therefore, crucial before undertaking an outreach campaign.

- The HSUS in partnership with other national groups including ASPCA®, International Fund for Animal Welfare®, Maddie’s Fund®, PetSmart Charities® & United Animal Nations® invested in the region as part of post-Katrina efforts.
- The HSUS campaign has targeted investments to facilitate additional low-cost capacity.

Cost as a Barrier

Quotes from focus group participants show how much cost is perceived as a barrier.

- These comments were made before the current economic downturn.

“I have lots of medical expenses...I have medicines I can’t actually afford on a monthly basis, so this would take precedence over that. There’s a real cost issue.”

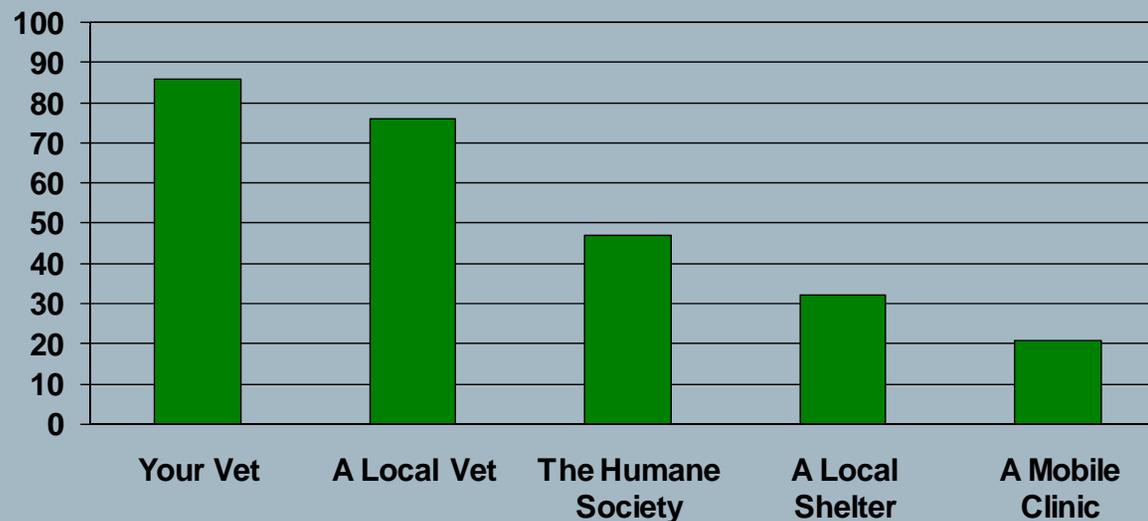

Address the Trust Barrier

Unfortunately, owners may not equate low cost with high quality.

- To overcome the trust barrier, staff, facilities & communications need to demonstrate the professionalism that owners seek in order to commit to a medical procedure for their pets.

Assume in each place the procedure would be performed by a licensed veterinarian using the best medicines and endorsed by the Humane Society. Would you trust them a lot, some, only a little or not at all to do a good job spaying or neutering your pet?

Trust "A Lot" (percent %)

Increasing Spay / Neuter

- Determine the target audience
- Decrease the barriers
- Define the message
 - Lead with euthanasia, not cost
 - Make the message personal
 - Use practical reasons with cat-only owners selectively
- Design the communications
- Direct the outreach

Most and Least Convincing Messages

Although humane personnel have succeeded with a variety of educational messages, research showed that some are more effective than others.

Most Convincing*

59% Statement with euthanasia statistics including a comment about offspring of “own” pet

Least Convincing*

34% Statement that spay/neutering could help pet live longer, healthier life, prevents certain cancers

Percent responding message is “very convincing” reason to spay or neuter own pet. Survey participants rated all messages one at a time for how convincing it is.*

Most and Least Convincing Messages: Detailed

Highest to lowest by percent rated “very convincing” on an individual message basis. Interviewees were split to test effectiveness of nuanced messages, e.g. purebred puppies in euthanasia message.

1. A quarter of a million pets enter animal shelters in Mississippi and Louisiana every year. More than half of pets in these shelters are put to sleep or euthanized because shelters are overcrowded and pets cannot be placed in homes. The offspring of your pet could end up in these shelters. Spaying and neutering helps reduce the number of unwanted pets and pet deaths.
2. A quarter of a million pets enter animal shelters in Mississippi and Louisiana every year including the puppies of pure bred pets. More than half of pets in these shelters are put to sleep or euthanized because shelters are overcrowded and pets cannot be placed in homes. The offspring of your pet could end up in these shelters. Spaying and neutering helps reduce the number of unwanted pets and pet deaths. (Rates #1 with those that shift to more likely to spay/neuter after hearing the messages) (57%)
3. Even though you are responsible, your pet may accidentally get out of your house, breed with other animals and produce strays. Strays can become a danger to the community, by spreading disease, biting people or fighting with other animals. You can reduce the number of strays by spaying and neutering your pets.
4. If your female pet has a litter, you have to find homes for all the offspring and pay to feed them. Spaying is the best way to ensure you do not have to deal with any unwanted litters.
5. Real men take responsibility for their children; real dogs can't. Some people think it is cruel and unnatural to neuter a dog, but it is far crueler to have to kill his puppies because no one can take care of them.

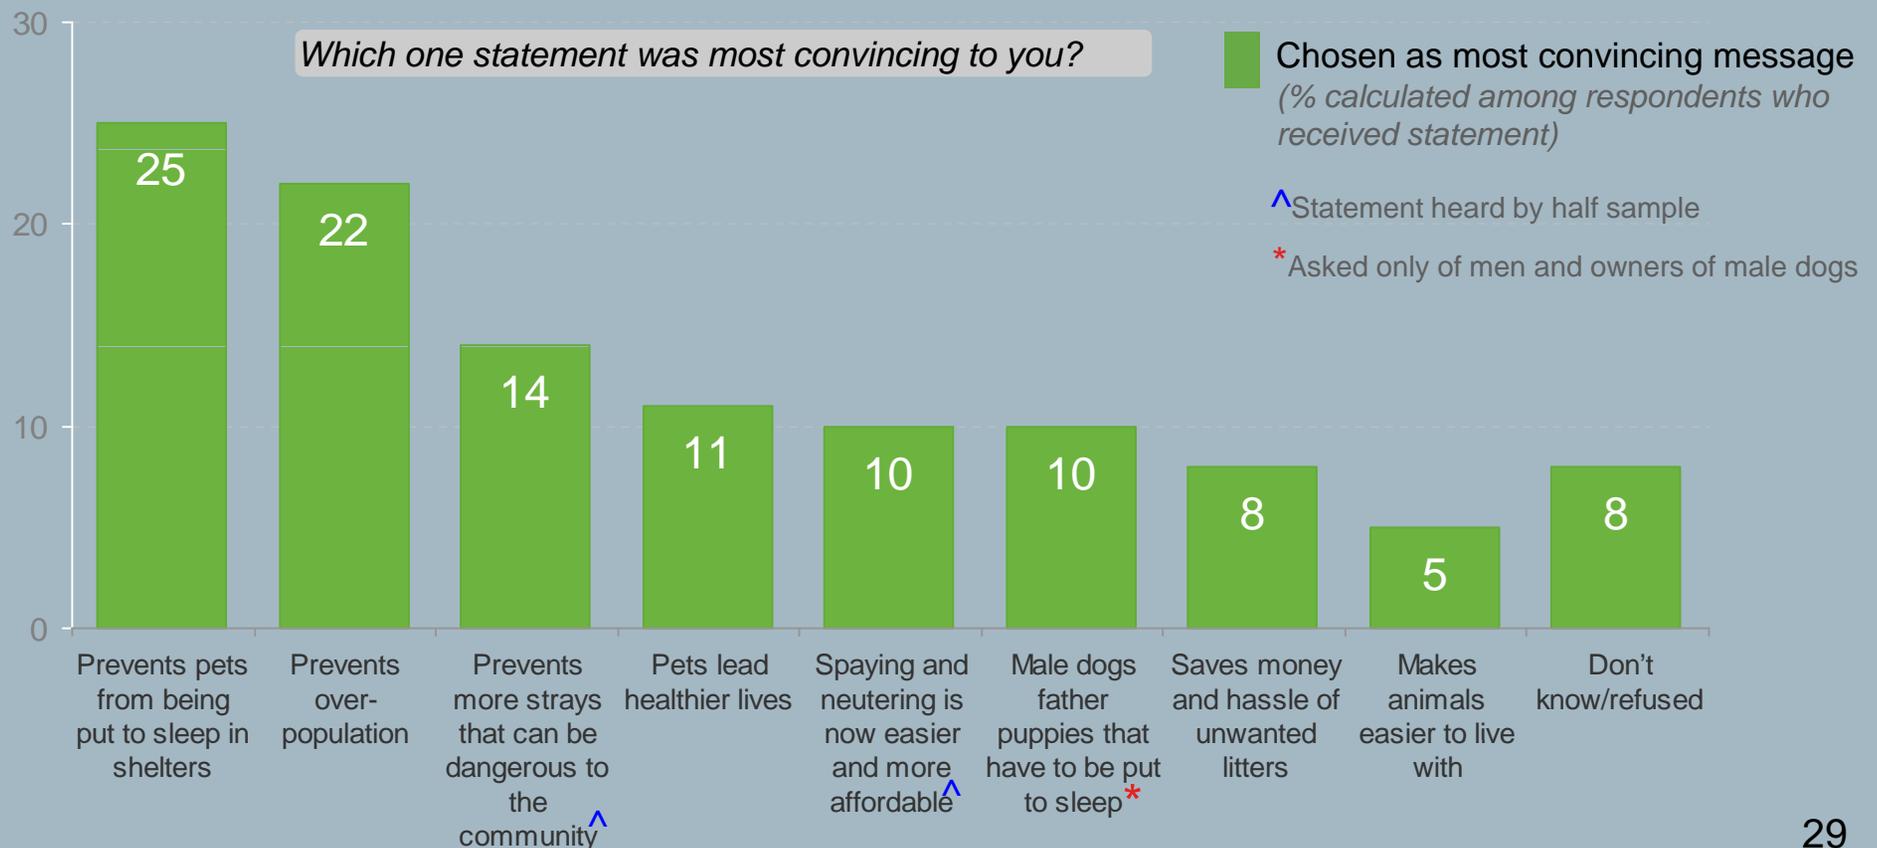

Most and Least Convincing Messages (cont'd):

6. Over its lifetime, your cat or dog can have many babies. A female animal that is not fixed can have over 100 babies and male animals can literally father thousands. Every one of us needs to spay or neuter our pets to help reduce the number of unwanted pets.
7. Spaying and neutering makes life easier around your home. Female pets won't go into heat, so there's no howling or need for messy diapers.
8. According to the American Veterinary Medical Association, spaying and neutering could help your pet live a longer and healthier life. Spaying and neutering pets can prevent cancer and other life threatening illnesses such as prostate disease.
9. Spaying or neutering your pet early on can save you a lot of money down the road. You won't have to care for unwanted litters and you will spend less money providing medical treatment for your pets since spayed or neutered pets also have fewer health problems.
10. Spaying and neutering can improve the behavior of your pet. It calms them down and makes them less likely to roam. Spayed and neutered pets are less likely to bite and fight, and are also less likely to make your house messy with spraying.
11. Getting your pet spayed or neutered is now easier and more affordable. There is a campaign underway in (MISSISSIPPI/LOUISIANA) that provides discounts for people who cannot afford to spay and neuter their pet.
12. Spaying and neutering could help your pet live a longer and healthier life. Spaying and neutering pets can prevent cancer and other life threatening illnesses such as prostate disease.

Most Convincing Messages = Euthanasia & Overpopulation

When asked to choose ONE most compelling message, euthanasia, followed closely by pet overpopulation, was most influential.

Euthanasia Doesn't Reflect on Shelters

When developing ads and other communications, the team focused on preserving the link between euthanasia and spay/neuter. Pilot city animal shelters report no misdirected blame toward them. Shelters, animal control officers and advocates are working together in the three pilots cities to bring this message to the community and to influence spay/neuter decisions. A television and radio ad presents directly from the shelter perspective. The final section of this report includes sample materials from the campaign and a link to the complete set.

"[We] have not received any negative feedback directed at us or any of the welfare organizations. I have received an overwhelming amount of response however what I have heard has been positive...[The campaign] has provided us a "conversation starter" with the community about spay/neutering and euthanasia." -Matthew Pepper, Director, Caddo Parish Animal Services, Shreveport, LA March 2009

"So many of our patrons have said that they just didn't realize the scope of the problem and how important it is to spay and neuter pets. Talking about the problem has prompted people to do their part and have their pets spayed or neutered. We are so grateful for the opportunity to shed some light on this subject and to see positive results." -Ellen Buntyn, Director of Operations, Humane Society of South Mississippi, Gulfport, MS March 2009 [Shelter with a spay neuter clinic]

Make the Message Personal

Although many owners are concerned about euthanasia, they may feel they are not part of the problem.

- Most pet owners who do not spay/neuter believe they are “responsible” pet owners who keep their pets in controlled environments and, therefore, are not contributing to the problem.
- People connect emotionally to the problem, but do not think they are contributing to the problem.

- Focus Group Report, GQRR, August 2007

Most Effective Message

A quarter of a million pets enter animal shelters in Mississippi and Louisiana every year including the puppies of purebred dogs. More than two-thirds of these homeless pets are put to sleep or euthanized. Your pet's puppies and kittens* could end up euthanized or suffering in the streets. Spaying and neutering helps reduce the number of unwanted pets and pet deaths.

After focus groups revealed that many owners do not believe they are part of the problem, survey testing used messages stating that their pet's puppies or kittens could be euthanized, in order to help them make the connection.*

Phrase on "suffering in the streets" was added after research, so that owners wouldn't conclude it was better to release a pet rather than relinquish to a shelter. References to shelter overcrowding and the lack of available homes were also deleted to keep the focus on the impact on spay-neuter, shelter intake and euthanasia.*

Make the Message Personal

Many of the ad concepts developed address this finding by linking euthanasia to their pets' potential offspring. In testing, participants got the connection.

“It probably makes you think should I have my dog neutered or spayed? Is my dog under control? What does my dog do when I’m not watching him?”

“...so you think well my dog had puppies, so I gave them away, I wonder where they went, did they have to go to a home to get euthanized. It makes you think.”

“This is a good question. I really don’t know.”

Cost as Lead Message - Not Effective

Although cost is a critical issue to address, leading with cost isn't as effective as emphasizing the importance of preventing euthanasia.

- Only 10% of owners of unaltered pets cited low-cost & convenience as the most convincing message.
- However, providing information on the availability of low-cost spay / neuter as part of a promotional piece is important.
- The following ad leads with cost and is therefore not recommended.

Use Practical Reasons With Cat-only Owners Selectively

Owners with cats only also responded well to practical considerations such as dealing with a female in heat.

- Cat-only households represent only 8% of the survey base, therefore employ this message selectively in one-on-one outreach to cat owners or other situations that may include a disproportionate share of people with only cats at home.
- Most persuasive message is “Spaying and neutering makes life easier around your home. Female pets won't go into heat, so there's no howling or need for messy diapers.”
- More likely to view cost as a barrier than owners of unaltered pets generally.
- Only 36% of these households go to the vet regularly vs. 66% of all households with unaltered pets.

Increasing Spay / Neuter

- Determine the target audience
- Decrease the barriers
- Define the message

- Design the communications
 - Use local statistics
 - Respect the owners
 - Be serious, professional
 - Use clear, accepted language

- Direct the outreach

Use Local Statistics

In interviews to test communications materials, euthanasia statistics were highly effective in motivating people to spay or neuter.

- Messaging with larger, annual (vs. daily) calculations has the most impact. Numbers are preferred to percentages.
- Participants focused on the words and information shared versus imagery. Images were secondary, if mentioned at all.
- Reactions to messaging were primarily consistent across most [demographic groups]; only slight differences surfaced among more educated pet owners.

Many [people interviewed] are reconsidering their initial position not to spay or neuter as a result of participating [in the research].

Use Local Statistics

Including state-specific data made the message even more relevant and compelling.

- People view the exposure to the state specific numbers as education and new information, versus a lecture or critique of the region.

“Speaking specifically about Mississippi is good because there is a real problem here in this state”

“This will get noticed and it is good to bring it home to Mississippi versus generalizing or applying to the country overall.”

“I would like to see Louisiana at the front of this statement. That would get people’s attention because you’re talking about our state, not just in general. Things are different here than other places”

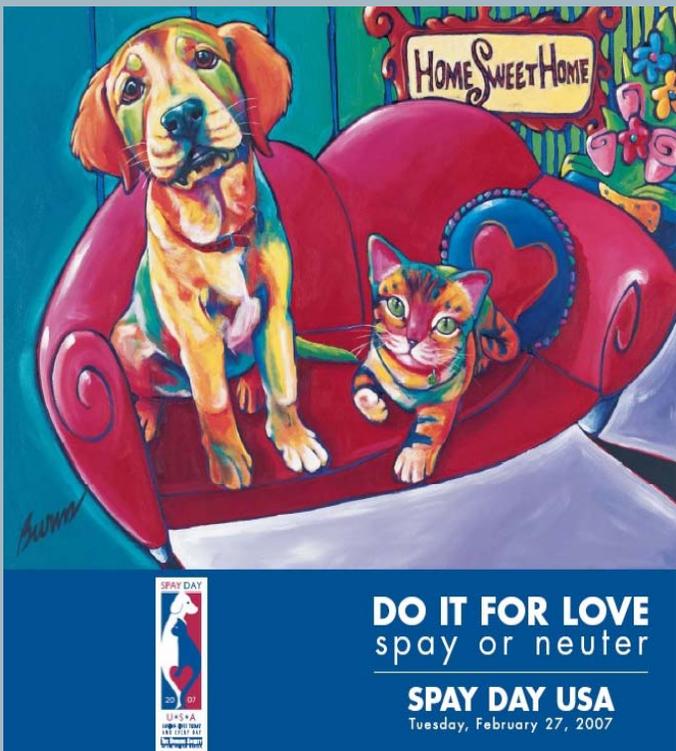

“That is very direct and is good, needs to be. It’s a sad amount. I’ve never seen a number..that’s sad. Lets you know two numbers, the intake and the result”

Respect the Owners

People with unaltered animals love their pets and feel they are responsible owners.

Messaging needs to tap pet owners' caring for their pets and for animals in general, rather than creating guilt or finger wagging.

“You are never home alone. There is always somebody to talk to.”

Shreveport, Caucasian, does not spay/neuter

“They are a lot of company. I mean they are loving and love you unconditionally.”

Be Serious, Professional

Cute – May help obtain volunteers or donors, but doesn't speak to targets

- People see spay / neuter as a serious decision and want the issue presented to them seriously.
- Humor, sexual innuendo & illustrations can be counterproductive.

“It's very cute, but not convincing.”

Shreveport, Caucasian, does not spay/neuter

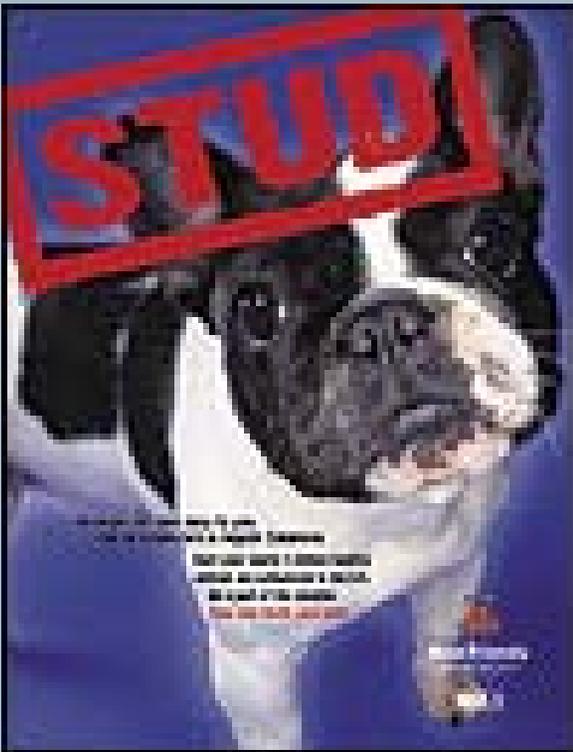

“It's supposed to be a serious decision that you're making. That's too silly” [referring to another piece with cartoon animals].

Jackson, Caucasian, does not spay/neuter

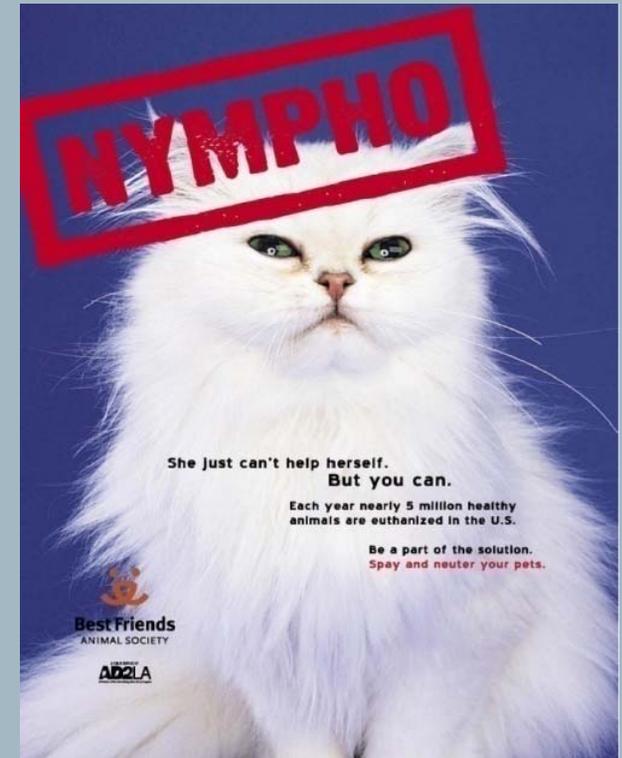

Cute can sabotage the message.

Animals that are too “good looking” worked against the messaging. Respondents questioned why you would get such beautiful animals fixed.

“I know the point is they’re trying to say, look, this dog is going to father a whole bunch of babies that aren’t wanted. But that’s not what I see. I see, you are just as cute as you can be.”

Shreveport, Caucasian, does not spay/neuter

Use Clear, Accepted Language

Spay and Neuter: Most people knew these terms across research efforts.

In Heat: Ad testing participants responded negatively to this phrase, although the reaction may be regional. The term “in season” was felt to be less sexually explicit and was recommended by participants.

Euthanize: This term was not specifically studied in the quantitative surveys where phrasing “euthanized or put to sleep” was used in statements and questions. In ad testing, only 59% were familiar with the term “euthanized.”

Although nearly everyone is familiar with the phrase “put to sleep”, most prefer “put down” since the animals will not wake up and other terms such as put to death, kill or destroy may be considered more violent or unintentional.

In Mississippi, 109,000 homeless pets enter shelters every year...73,000 are put to sleep, thousands more suffer in our streets.

As difficult as it is to do, healthy, good-natured dogs, cats, puppies and kittens are put down at an alarming rate. Mississippi shelters can't save and support the huge number of accidental litters, strays and family pets brought to the shelter door everyday.

You can reduce these numbers
by Spaying and Neutering
